Telling our Stories, Finding our Roots: Exeter's Multi-coloured History

The complexities of the abolition movement are extensive and beyond the scope of this paper: this is a brief, and very simple, introduction to the issue looking at Exeter

The National Picture

The extremely lucrative trade in enslaved people was dominated by Britain in the eighteenth century: Britain was the world's premier maritime power. Much of the trade centred on West Africa. It was a complex activity involving indigenous chiefs trading enslaved people from their own societies, as well as the middle men, slave raiders and traders, capturing people (see Olaudah Equiano's description of raids on his village).ⁱ Whatever the source, the enslaved people were then transported across the Atlantic and sold into the ownership of an ever growing number of plantations which had developed in the West Indies, and the Americas. Their forced labour in the main produced sugar but also coffee and allspice. The trade had begun in the sixteenth century and there is evidence of involvement of Devon families from very early on (Sir John Hawkins)ⁱⁱ. Wool products manufactured in Devon and Exeter were included in the early trade to West Africa.ⁱⁱⁱ Later in the eighteenth century, some of the 'wool' wealth produced would be invested in the creation of banks in Exeter, and for others money might be used to generate further wealth through the plantation economy producing sugar and its import to Britain - the 'triangular' trade. The immorality of this system cannot be underestimated nor the continuing immorality of modern slavery in the 21st century world economy.

By the seventeenth century the Society of Friends, or Quakers, had already begun to expose the assault on the dignity and rights of fellow humans in this trade. The Quakers had been a persecuted minority sect and some had left England to establish communities in America where they had set an example of freeing slaves.^{iv} They were ridiculed by the majority for campaigning against the slave trade but were sought out by former slaves such as Olaudah Equiano. Over a period of twenty years, owned and sold three times, Equiano worked aboard ships in a variety of roles. His last owner, a Quaker (illustrating that any group of people is not homogenous), allowed Equiano to trade items on his own account by which he earned enough to 'buy' his freedom. He had also achieved an education. He wrote his autobiographical commentary on slavery, 'Interesting narratives of the Life of Olaudah Equiano' which ran to eight editions. It became a seminal treatise, quoted at meetings, as he travelled throughout the country, with others freed from bondage, to raise awareness of the evils of slavery. He met Thomas Clarkson, who with a small group of friends, would form the Society for Effecting the Abolition of the Slave Trade in 1787 to raise awareness of the injustice and cruelty of the slave trade on which the production of sugar depended.

It has been traditional to focus on the strong moral emphasis of the early abolitionist movement, the focus on the slave trade rather than slavery. In part this was to take account of the fact that enslaved people, under colonial law, were viewed as the property of the plantation owners. An attack on slavery was an assault on property rights. Voting rights and political power were dependent on the ownership of property. Others have considered whether the reasons were economic, there being a decline in the profitability of the plantation economy as industrialisation grew (Eric Williams), but in turn this theory is questioned by other historians who maintain the multifaceted components of the 'slave' economy were looking to expansion at this time.

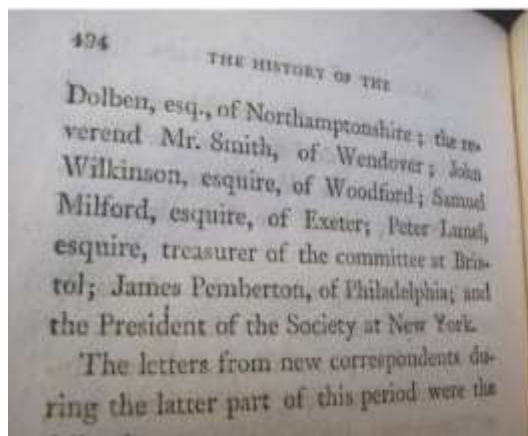

Initially those who came together to work for the abolition of slavery belonged to minority religious groups but a momentum grew which saw it become a national movement. It has been suggested that this is the first time in England people became outraged about the rights of others, not themselves, 'And most startlingly of all, the rights of people of another colour, on another continent'.^v A wide range of tactics were used, that activists in current campaigns may recognise - fliers, pamphlets, posters, speakers touring the country to raise awareness and funds, to hold meetings, to draw up petitions, to boycott the use of sugar - all these were used to encourage the formation of abolition committees in cities and towns throughout the country to counter the power of the plantation-owning members of Parliament.

Local Picture in 18th century Exeter

National history records the well-known names of William Wilberforce, who led the action in parliament, and Thomas Clarkson and Granville Sharp who travelled the country educating the public about the realities of slavery and the trade, illustrating their talks with artefacts relating to the trade. In Exeter, a group of key members of the Unitarian and Quaker communities came together to form a committee working to support the Society for Abolition of Slavery in London. Samuel Milford had formed the City Bank with Richard Hall Clark in 1786, and belonged to George's Meeting House in South Street. A prominent minister of that congregation was Rev James Manning. Thomas Clarkson records meeting these two individuals, and exchanging correspondence with them, in his book published in 1808 recording the development of the abolition movement.^{vi}

Clarkson visited Exeter in 1788 and is recorded in the Exeter Flying post as stating 'every cubic inch of sugar we consume costs a cubic inch of human blood'^{vii}. The Exeter Flying Post records notices of meetings, the raising of subscriptions to the London branch of the Abolition Society, petitions to Parliament, and also in 6.11.88 a poem of a slave's destiny:

The following documents appear in the Appendix - (1) Petition quoted in EFP 27.3.1788; (2) Record of meeting, citing letter from Granville Sharp as reason for coming together, naming committee members and some subscriptions EFP 12.6.1788; (3) Poem of a slave's destiny EFP 6.11.1788; (4) List of subscribers EFP 20.11.1788 - including MPs Sir Charles Warwick Bampfylde, and John Baring, Esq.

Local subscribers

The presence of the name of Charles Bampfylde on this list is of interest since other branches of his mother's family, the Codringtons, had been leading plantation owners in the West Indies for generations (see research of colleague Miranda Harvey within this project). The second MP listed, John Baring, was a founder of the Devonshire Bank in Exeter in 1770, following the establishment in London of the company which would become Baring Brothers, founded on the wealth created from the family's trade in cloth in both cities^{viii}. John Baring withdrew from much immediate commercial activity but stood as MP from 1776-1802 (Records of Houses of Parliament). The Baring family and the Codrington family, to whom Bampfylde was related, feature prominently in the data base created by University College, London which looks closely at those who claimed recompense after the 'emancipation' of slaves in 1838.^{ix}

The strong presence of Unitarian and Quaker names on subscription and committee lists reflects the situation nationally. At this time, non-conformists were not allowed to stand for parliament, be admitted to university or hold positions in the civil service:

'In respect of civic matters the position of Unitarians is still little different from that of the other Dissenters. They are allowed freedom of worship, but they are at the same time excluded from all high public office, unless this is explicitly permitted by the Church of England. As all students seeking admission to the Ancient Universities are required to subscribe to the Church of England's Thirty-Nine Articles, all young Unitarians are excluded from these institutions.'^x

Perhaps people who were prevented from participating fully in society had a greater understanding of the position of excluded and marginalised people – including enslaved people – leading them to campaign on issues of social justice.

The Quaker Sparkes family also feature prominently in Exeter committees. They too set up a bank in Exeter, The General Bank, in 1792. Todd Gray, in his book, Devon and the Slave Trade, draws attention to the bank's creation of a pound note bearing an engraving of William Penn, leading Quaker activist in America. Joseph Sparkes, and his brother Thomas, would later create the city suburb of Pennsylvania, including the elegant Pennsylvania Terrace, overlooking the city, again commemorating their famous fellow Quaker across the Atlantic.

The presence of women's names on the subscription lists are of interest too, not only wives and daughters of male signatories, but women subscribing in their own right. Activity undertaken by women in particular at this time was to encourage abstention from the purchase and eating of sugar. Clare Midgley has written extensively on the subject of women against slavery but unfortunately does not give any reports of activity of this kind in Exeter, however that does not mean that there were not individuals who took this action.^{xi}

It can be seen that the names which appear in the reports of meetings, the subscribers to the national organisation, are those of business men, manufacturers, etc. The background of ordinary city people, who supported the abolition of the slave trade, and signed petitions, remain unknown but it is known that there were a thousand signatories to the petition sent to Parliament in March 1788.^{xii}

Progress of the Abolition movement

There was much activity until 1792, but then public petitioning ceased as fears grew in Parliament about the influence of the French Revolution. Unitarians were, 'often sympathetic towards the Revolution... and incurred charges of lack of patriotism in consequence'.^{xiii} However, by 1807 the abolition of the slave trade was achieved, and the Act passed in parliament. This applied to British slave ships but other countries, such as France, Spain and Portugal continued trading in enslaved people. The ownership and use of enslaved people did not cease on plantations. A group of those who had major involvement in the Caribbean plantations, the West India Interest, lobbied hard in Parliament to counter the activity of the abolitionists. However, no Exeter MPs appear to have been particularly active in that pro slavery lobbying group. More muted activity to achieve emancipation continued. In 1823 a petition was presented to Parliament from Exeter stating, "while a system exists which makes man the property and subjects him to the will of another, instances of grievous oppression and cruelty will inevitably occur".^{xiv}

The response to this petition, and many from all over the country led to resolutions being passed by 1824 recognising the eventual goal to end slavery. However, their nature was very moderate, acknowledging the planters' perspective:

"If the measures which may be adopted for the accomplishment of this great work of national humanity, justice and policy shall injuriously affect the property of any classes of persons connected with the Colonies, the claim of such persons for relief will receive the equitable consideration of the legislature"^{xv}

Reports indicate much ambiguity on the issues - illustrating a Christian response but indicating an acute awareness of the financial implications. The conditions and punishment of enslaved people is discussed but with little remonstrance to the slave owners.

In 1825, the Devon & Exeter Society for Promoting the Mitigation and Abolition of Slavery through the British Dominions had been established, nationally this organisation was commonly known as the Anti-Slavery Society. The President was Samuel Frederick Milford (Samuel Milford's son), Thomas Sparkes was Treasurer, and the Secretaries, William Lee and Robert Dymond.

In October 1830, the Exeter Ladies Association for promoting the extinction of colonial slavery was established. The Chair was Mrs Robert Dymond, and Miss Lydia Manning, Miss Tyrell and Miss Patience Lee, all non-conformists, are listed as secretaries.^{xvi} We do not know how radical these women may have been but it has been argued that in some instances women had become much more radical than men in the pursuit of abolition.

Activity towards abolition continued. Enslaved people were also engaged in their own campaign against slavery through resistance, rebellion and revolt, emphasising that this system would not continue. Following the changes brought about by Parliamentary Reform in 1832, matters came to a head in 1833. The names of Exeter men at meetings of the Anti-Slavery Society at Exeter Hall, London in 1833 have been identified. In April, 1833, attendance of 350 delegates 'from the country' including Matthew Vicars (an Anglican rector of All Hallows, Exeter), Joseph Sparkes and John Bristow (minister, Castle Street congregation from Nov. 1824-47) appear as representing Devon, see Figure 4.^{xvii} In July 1833, signatories at a meeting of the Society were Matthew Vicars and Henry Sparkes, see Figure 5.^{xviii}

Abolition Act 1834

The Slavery Abolition Act was eventually passed in August 1833, and enacted in 1834, but it only released slaves under the age of six immediately. Those who were older became 'apprentices', ostensibly giving a period of time when enslaved people would learn the skills required for full freedom. But they were still to provide free labour and were beholden to their owners. Agitation and acts of resistance by those still bound in this manner, who saw little significant change in their conditions, finally brought the end to enslavement in the West Indies in 1838.

A factor of the Act was the compensation to the plantation owners 'for their business losses' - £20m set aside by the British Government to be distributed among slave owners. The excellent resource available on the University College London website gives the names of plantation owners, how many slaves they owned, and the compensation they received, offering the opportunity to identify just who were the Devon families, and individuals, who had benefitted from the wealth created by this hideous exploitation.^{xx} Slaves received no compensation at all.

Sierra Leone Company

In this account, nothing has been said of the Sierra Leone Company, a settlement for enslaved people who had been freed. Involving Granville Sharp, great hopes were raised. The Navy employed Equiano as Commissary of Stores for the first expedition^{xxi} but he was dismissed following his exposure of the inefficiency and corruption in Plymouth. In his will, Samuel Milford, the Banker, and Chair of the early Abolition committees in Exeter, left shares in the company to his wife and daughters, 'hoping they will not dispose thereof....'.^{xxii} We cannot know at what point he purchased these shares and whether his motive was to support this project to offer a new life to the freed slaves, or whether he viewed it as an investment to make money, perhaps a combination of both. The company had a very chequered history and led to the deaths of many of the settlers as a result of the climate, disease, and the nature of the land which they were expected to develop.

Later Activity

Anti-slavery activity did not cease in 1839. Activity continued focussing on slavery in the Americas and the prominent ex-slave Frederick Douglass, author of My Bondage My Freedom, visited the city in August 1846^{xxiii}, addressing two public meetings, 'which were crowded to excess on the first evening' at Congdon's Royal Subscription Rooms:^{xxiv}

'We announced last week the intention of William Lloyd Garrison, president of the Anti -Slavery Society; and Frederick Douglass, a man of colour and once himself a slave, to address and endeavour to excite the sympathies of an Exeter audience on this subject. And here we may take leave to observe that many years since there was not wanting in Exeter and towns in its neighbourhood which we could mention, expressions of detestation of a commerce in the human species. There were persons here and in this county, who, when that doctrine was not most popular, boldly asserted this commerce and the holding of slaves as a species of property, to be as impolitic as it is inhuman and unjust. Foremost in the ranks of these men stood the respectable members of the Society of Friends, and never has the cry ceased among us for the entire abolition for a system as contrary to the laws of God as it is afflicting to humanity, and abhorrent to men.'

In his presentation, Douglass appealed strongly to the audience to reject support to the American Church, in all denominations, since he considered they endorsed slavery. He stated there were ministers of religion who were slave owners, the President of the United States owned slaves, members of Senate and Congress owned slaves. A full transcription of his dramatic speech is available through The Gilder Lehrman Center for the Study of Slavery, Resistance, and Abolition, Yale University.^{xxv}

Conclusion

The British trade in slaves and the ownership of people took fifty years, between 1788 and 1838, to be abolished. In those fifty years it had not only been activity in Britain which brought about abolition, as indicated there had been major rebellions by enslaved people. In 1791 half a million rose to seize their freedom on the island of St. Domingue (modern Haiti), this revolution lasted until 1804, resulting in the ending of slavery on that island. In 1823 the Demerara revolt by the enslaved in Guyana took place, and in 1831/2 the Christmas rebellion in Jamaica. These major risings influenced all quarters in the pursuit of abolition. Those who were activists in the abolition of slavery movement in provincial Exeter were not radical 'revolutionaries', and it has been suggested that it became highly respectable to be part of the abolition movement, but if individuals in regional cities and towns had not responded to the early calls for a commitment to challenge the outrage of slavery, to campaign to bring British involvement to an end, abolition may have taken much longer. However, we must not, and cannot forget the legacy of slavery, it will never disappear.

The following is the petition of the city of Exeter, for the abolition of the Slave Trade.

To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled.

"We, the Mayor, Gentlemen, Clergy, and other inhabitants of the city of Exeter, whose names are hereunto subscribed, observing with pleasure the applications already made to Parliament from various parts of this kingdom, in order to procure the abolition of the African Slave Trade, beg leave to declare our extreme abhorrence of a traffick founded in a disregard of the common sentiments of our nature, subversive of the principles of natural justice, utterly repugnant to the laws of the Gospel, and in the highest degree disgraceful to a Christian nation.

"To justify so inhuman a commerce, we dare not admit the plea of political necessity, in opposition to the clear unequivocal dictates of justice and humanity; a plea of so much the less account in the present question, as there is good reason to hope that the example of abolition being once given by this enlightened country, will soon be followed by the other nations of Europe. But above all, we may rest assured that the common father of mankind, who hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth, will never suffer the glory or happiness of any people to be diminished by an extended exercise of righteousness and mercy.

"We cannot doubt but the legislature will take into its most serious deliberation, a subject recommended to it by the earnest supplications of a compassionate people and we presume to hope, that such measures will be adopted by Parliament, as shall be effectual for suppressing a traffick conceived in avarice, carried on by treachery, and involving in it a merciless and unparagoned destruction of the human species."

At a meeting held at the Castle of Exeter the 20th day of March, 1788, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of instructing the representatives of the county to support the intended application to Parliament for the abolition of the Slave Trade, it was resolved, that the following instructions be signed and transmitted by the Sheriff to John Rolle and John Polexten Ballard, Esquires. "WE, the High Sheriff, Gentlemen, Clergy, and Freeholders of the county of Devon; assembled at the Castle of Exeter, having with great pleasure observed that a bill is intended to be brought into parliament to effectuate, in due time, the total abolition of the Slave trade, think it highly becoming us, as men & as christians, thus publicly to declare our abhorrence and detestation of that iniquitous, cruel, and infamous traffick carried on between Africa and America—by dragging our fellow creatures from every thing dear to them into slavery. And at the same time, to request you to lend every assistance in your power to procure a law for regulating the manner of supplying the plantations with a sufficient number of hands for their cultivation, by methods not subversive of the natural rights of mankind, nor inconsistent with the principles of the holy religion we profess."

"As your constituents 'tis highly fitting we should, in this public manner, jointly declare to you our sentiments and wishes on this great national question, not doubting but that the Great Parent and Father of all the nations of the earth, whom he hath made of one blood, will graciously assist any people with his blessing, who shall endeavour by all right and proper means to obtain so benevolent an end.

tioner, he need not fear that, for he has his breeches pockets, from whence he will take them; and which he instantly d Smith might be again asked whether h was done, and Smith having declared launched into eternity. Their bodies night forwarded, in a cart, to be hung cording to their sentence, near the spot der was committed; and the bodies sent to the Hospital; for dissection.

SLAVE TRADE.

At an adjourned Meeting held this Day at the Hall, in Exeter, to take into Consideration a Letter from GEORGE VAN SUANZ, Esq; of London, Chairman of the SOCIETY for the ABOLITION of the SLAVE TRADE, the Letter addressed to SAMUEL MITCHELL, Esq; of this City was produced and read. It appeared from this Letter, that the Expence incurred by that Society in publishing and distributing in this and foreign Kingdoms such Productions as are calculated to promote the general Design has been very great, and is continually increasing; that the Society in London are at this Time engaged in procuring and producing before a Committee of the Privy Council such Evidences as are deemed necessary; that the Society will therefore require much greater pecuniary Assistance than they now possess in order to accomplish their Object, particularly as it will be requisite to support this Cause in Parliament by Counsel and Witnesses in Opposition to an opulent and powerful Body of Men interested in the Continuation of this Trade. In another Letter from Mr. Sharp, the Society in London also request that a Committee may be formed in EXETER, similar to those established for mutual Correspondence and Assistance in YORK, BRISTOL, MANCHESTER, LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, BIRMINGHAM, and PARIS; at which last Place Mr. Sharp says a respectable Society is also established for the same benevolent Purpose, and is honoured with the Names of some of the first Nobility of that Kingdom, in consequence of which, the following Resolutions were unanimously entered into:

RESOLVED, That from a thorough Conviction of the Justice of those Sentiments which are contained in the Petition to Parliament from the Mayor and upwards of a Thousand of the Inhabitants of Exeter on the Subject of the Slave Trade, it becomes our Duty zealously to unite with the Society in London in their Endeavours for its Abolition. That the under-mentioned Gentlemen, together with any others who may voluntarily offer their Assistance, be appointed a Committee for this Purpose, (any five of whom may proceed to Business); that they be authorized to take such Measures from Time to Time, as may appear to them likely to promote this benevolent Intention; and that they be requested to report their Proceedings at a future Meeting.

ADDRESS, written by J. SHAPLEIGH, of Newcourt, Esq.

And spoken by Mr. HUGHES, in the Character of Falstaff, at the Opening of the Theatre on Monday last.

PUFFT up with your encouragement last year, Again, my Masters, I attend you here: You see, what's done—'twas an expensive matter, More than I thought, or I'm no two-legg'd creature. Those who reward me, heaven reward, I say, The venture, wary now, is no boy's play! But plague on cowards—Falstaff cannot fear To face his friends—no enemy being near. I've charg'd (I mean been charg'd) both scot and lot, And enter on this service—hiding hot. For glowing gratitude has prick'd me on; But should it prick me off—what's to be done? Will gratitude the painter's bill defray? No! no! Will gratitude the joiner's pay? Oh! no! Know gratitude arithmetic; To make my tradesmen shoo, whose seasons tick? Oh! no! What's gratitude?—A heavenly word! Which even Falstaff's wit can't make absurd; It was no like sack, and gives that generous glow, Whose strongest influence I experience now. Unbowel'd, as I shall be by, and by, E'en then my heart will feel its energy. Not on compassion: I've improved this ground— You owe me, therefore, six a thousand pound! Thousand! a million! in my estimation, At millions I must price your approbation; I wish no bond for't—hate securities, Pay by installments—pay me as you please. I've march'd my troops where they may pepper'd be!— No buckram men—unless in tragedy! What'er their talents, may they suit your taste, And make my means seem greater than my waist! Rare words!—Bravo!—Prompter, the music, come! Oh! I found with this Theatre my home.

AT a Second General Meeting of the Inhabitants of this City, convened by the Right Worshipful the Mayor, for taking into Consideration the African Slave Trade,

SLAVE TRADE.

AT a Meeting of the Committee established in Exeter for the ABOLITION of the SLAVE TRADE, held this Day, SAMUEL MILFORD, Esq; in the Chair,

Resolved, That the following Advertisement be inserted in the public Prints.

It appears by a Letter written last Week by the Society instituted in London for the Abolition of the Slave Trade to this Committee, that the Subscriptions collected in different Parts of the Kingdom have been entirely expended. It appears also, in the most satisfactory Manner, from the same Letter, that the farther Sum of 3000l. will be necessary to accomplish the humane and patriotic Object of the abolition of the Slave Trade being strenuously opposed by a very potent and powerful Body of Men interested in it, who will spare no Expence or Labour in order to ensure its Continuation, when they come to be heard before the Privy Council, and the Legislature by their Counsel, Agents, and Witnesses. If therefore the above mentioned Sum cannot be raised in order to encounter them, it is very much to be apprehended that this Cause of Humanity will be overborne in the next Sessions of Parliament; and this barbarous Commerce will still be carried on with all its incidental and inseparable Inconveniences.

As it is now demonstrated, that the Slave Trade is extremely injurious to the British Navy and to the national Prosperity, as well as inexplicably iniquitous and inhuman, it is hoped, that the Friends of their Country and of Humanity will not withhold their Contributions.

A State of the Account of the Moneys expended by the London Committee, and the Considerations which evince the absolute Necessity of farther Subscriptions, may be seen by any Subscriber on applying to Samuel Milford, Esq; at the City Bank. Subscriptions continue to be received by the Exeter, Devonshire, and City Banks.

A List of Subscribers will appear in the News-papers of next Week.

Exeter, 4th Nov. 1788.

ENGRAVING.

who was not less distinguished for the Excellence of his professional Abilities, than for his profound Erudition and unbounded Benevolence—E. A. EZEKIEL, Engraver and Jeweller, highly sensible of the very flattering Reception his Engraving of Dr. GLASS was honoured with, tho' but a first Essay, and trusting that a second will not be less deserving of that Patronage, is encouraged to offer the following Proposals, for engraving, by Subscription.

The NEGRO'S COMPLAINT.

WIND o'er the tremulous sea,
The Moon spreads her mantle of light,
And the gale gently dying away,
Breath'd soft on the bosom of night.
On the forscastle Maraton stood,
And pour'd forth his sorrowful tale;
His tears fell unseen in the flood,
His sighs pass'd unheard on the gale,
Ah, wretch! in wild anguish he cried,
From country and liberty thrown;
Ah! Maraton, would thou had'st died,
Ere o'er the salt waves thou wert borne.
Accurs'd be the merciless band,
Who his love could from Maraton tear;
And blasted this impotent hand
That was sever'd from all I held dear,
Through the groves of Angola I stray'd,
Love and hope made my bosom their home,
There I talk'd with my favorite maid,
Nor dreamt of my sorrow to come.
From the thicket the man-hunter sprung,
My cries echo'd loud through the air:
There was fury and wrath in his tongue,
He was dead to the shrieks of despair.
Now my tears down my cheeks ever flow,
Still let sleep from my eye-lids depart;
And still may the arrow of woe,
Drink deep of the stream of my heart.
But hark! on the silence of night,
My Adila's accents I hear!
And mournful beneath the wan light
I see her lov'd image appear!
Slow o'er the smooth ocean she glides,
As the mist that hangs white on the wave,
And fondly her lover she chides,
That lingers so long from his grave!
O Maraton! hate thee, she cries—
Ere the reign of oppression is o'er,
The tyrant is robb'd of his prize,
And Adila sorrows no more.
Now sinking amid the dim ray
Her form seems to fade on my view,
O stay thee—my Adila stay
She beckons, and I must pursue.
To-morrow the white man in vain
Shall proudly account me his slave;
My shackles I plunge in the main,
And rush to the relics of the brave.

Dated Knowle, 24th Feb. 1824.

A MEETING OF THE INHABITANTS OF EXETER, and its VICINITY, convened at the Guildhall, February 28, 1824, to consider the propriety of presenting PETITIONS to PARLIAMENT, for MITIGATING and GRADUALLY ABOLISHING SLAVERY throughout the British Colonies.

The Right Worshipful the MAYOR in the CHAIR.

It was Resolved unanimously:—
That this Meeting regard with cordial satisfaction the Resolutions unanimously adopted by the House of Commons in the last Session of Parliament, on the subject of Negro Slavery.

That this Meeting relies with confidence on the wisdom of Parliament, and of His Majesty's Government, for devising and carrying into effect the measures which may be necessary to attain the important object of these resolutions.

That it is the firm and decided conviction of this Meeting that the system of Slavery which exists in the West Indies is fundamentally and essentially unjust, and that it ought to be abolished with as much expedition as may be found compatible with the well being of the Slaves, and the safety of the Colonies.

That this Meeting trusts and believes that the extinction of this system by such a series of cooperative and well digested measures as shall gradually prepare the Negroes for exercising the inalienable privileges of personal freedom, will be found essentially to promote, not only their welfare and happiness, but the permanent interests of the Planters, the security of His Majesty's Colonies, and the general prosperity of the Empire.

That this Meeting is persuaded that if the measures which may be adopted for the accomplishment of this great work of national humanity, justice, and policy, should injuriously affect the property of any classes of persons connected with the Colonies, the claims of such persons for relief will require the equitable consideration of the Legislature; and that this Meeting would be ready cheerfully to bear its proportion of any pecuniary sacrifices which may be required of the British Nation on that account.

That Petitions to both Houses of Parliament, which have been now read, embodying the substance of the foregoing Resolutions, and praying that the measures contemplated by the resolutions of the House of Commons for mitigating and gradually abolishing Slavery throughout the British Colonies, may be speedily and firmly pursued to their final consummation, be adopted as the Petitions of this Meeting.

That the Right Worshipful the Mayor, and the Gentlemen who signed the requisition, do form a Committee, with power added to their number, for procuring signatures to the Petitions, and taking the necessary measures for getting them presented to Parliament.

That a Subscription be now entered into to defray the charge of these Petitions and incidental expenses connected therewith.

W. CROCKETT, Mayor.

The Chairman having left the Chair, and John Haddy James, Esq. having been called to it—

It was Resolved unanimously.

That the Thanks of this Meeting be given to the Right Worshipful the Mayor, for his readiness in calling the Meeting; and for his conduct in the Chair.
